1. No changes in the occupation of the restricted area at Roebelin Lake, Fuerstenberg (N 54/U 62), were noted by 4 January 1951. Many officers were seen walking in that area. Military personnel observed there wore, in order of frequency, red-bordered black epaulets without branch-of-service insignia, with tank insignia, with artillery insignia, epaulets with infantry insignia, signal insignia, medical insignia and motor transport insignia. Motor

2. Only a few officers and MI and little vehicular traffic were observed in the restricted area on Baalenseestrasse. Military personnel there wore various branch-of-service insignia, as was also the case in the restricted area on Roebelin Lake, where most of the MI wore red-bordered black epaulets, including some with signal insignia, and a few wore black-bordered black epaulets.

wearing the same kind of epaulets were seen working at the buildings, to which fire extinguishers were attached. Motor [redacted] One garage, which was located on the road leading southeastward to the lake, was occupied to capacity by trucks and guarded by sentries with red-bordered black epaulets. Thirteen groups of soldiers, each of 10 to 12 men with red-bordered black epaulets, did close-order drill east of the garage.

5. A cantonment was located in the area between the Fuerstenberg-Ravensbrueck-Lychen road and the railroad line. Its western section contained quarters for personnel and its eastern section garages, storehouses and sheds. Gate guards wore red-bordered black epaulets. From 200 to 300 troops wearing red-bordered black epaulets and black epaulets were quartered there. No training activity was noticed. One of the cantonment buildings was a club which was also frequented by officers from other installations in the Ravensbrueck area. The garages were used to about two-thirds of their capacity as shelters for trucks. No vehicular traffic was observed.
